

NATALIE IS NAMED ULTIMATE

GIRL NEXT DOOR

What a honey!

By EMILY VOLKERT

scorcher from Stockport, Greater Manchester, is ecstatic over her success in FHM's third annual High Street Honeys contest.

She says: "I'm so surprised I've won. It's every girl's dream to appear on the cover of FHM and mine has just come true."

"The whole experience was amazing from start to finish. I've had so much fun being involved in the campaign and, given the chance, I would love to do it all over again."

Gorgeous 2003 winner Kayleigh Pearson handed over her crown to Natalie at an exclusive ceremony at the trendy Trap club in London.

FHM Editor Ross Brown said: "This year has been another really successful High Street Honeys campaign to discover the UK's most beautiful 'girl next door'."

"We're all really proud of every single girl who entered the competition. Natalie will make an exceptional FHM cover girl."

And judging by these hot shots, we agree.

● Natalie will appear on the cover of FHM's January edition, becoming only the third unknown girl to grace the cover of the men's magazine. The new issue of FHM is on sale now.

MIKE WARD WHAT'S HOT TO WATCH

YOU'VE probably got a rough idea already, but there's a chance tonight, in BBC1's documentary Band Aid 20 (10.35pm), to hear how the latest version of Do They Know It's Christmas? came together. Focusing on the recording session, it talks to many of the big names involved - masterminds Bob Geldof and Midge Ure, naturally, along with Bono, Sir

Paul McCartney, Chris Martin, Robbie Williams and Dido - and looks at how record producer Nigel Godrich, best known for making pretentious records with Radiohead, set out to update the song.

Elsewhere, if you prefer to think of charity beginning at home, then I'm sure you won't feel remotely guilty about tuning in To The Gadget Show (Five, 7.30pm) and greedily picking yourself a new gizmo for Christmas. Tonight's show focuses on festive best-sellers.

Finally, if you're wondering why the hell I haven't mentioned the concluding night of I'm A Celebrity... Get Me Out Of Here, ITV1, 9pm, it's because you hardly need me to point it out. Then again, I suppose I just have.

Simon Edge

...on last night's telly

IT is generous of Martin Rees to call his new series about life, the universe and everything WHAT WE STILL DON'T KNOW (Sunday, C4).

Compared to the rest of us, there is little Mr Rees doesn't know. Actually, he is Sir Martin, although he modestly doesn't tell us that, and he is the Astronomer Royal. No, that doesn't mean he prepares horoscopes for the Queen, but it does mean he has a brain the size of the cosmos.

The good news for us humbler humanoids is that he is very good at explaining difficult stuff, such as the question of life in the rest of the universe. Apparently it is quite likely we may discover signs of it in the next decade or so, and here's why.

There are 400 billion stars in our galaxy, and there are billions of galaxies. One in 10 stars have planets orbiting them (just as Earth orbits the Sun), and one in 10 of those are in "habitable zones" - the right distance from the star so that water neither boils nor freezes.

Freak

That means there are 4 billion Earth-like planets in our galaxy alone where life could exist. That doesn't mean it does, however high the odds seem. Some people believe that life is the product of a freak set of circumstances, with less chance of repeating themselves on Planet Tharg as I have of winning Saturday's Lotto.

But life may be less random than we think. Even though evolution looks like a crazy free-for-all, responsible for everything from pond life to Natalie Appleton, biologists think it is governed by rules that may be universal.

For example did you know that shrews, which live for a year, have the same number of heartbeats in their lives as whales, which live for a century? (Although you do wonder who counts them.)

This is smart telly at its best and it has the fantastic effect of making you think you know as much as Sir Martin.

THREE women - a brunette, redhead and blonde - are in front of a firing squad.

The brunette is brought forward and the executioner shouts: "Ready... Aim..."

The brunette yells: "Earthquake!" Everyone is startled and she manages to escape.

The angry guards then bring the redhead forward. The executioner shouts, "Ready... Aim..."

The redhead screams out: "Hurricane!" Again, everyone looks around and she too manages to slip away.

By now, the blonde has worked out what the others did.

The guards bring her forward and the executioner shouts: "Ready... Aim..."

The blonde shouts: "Fire!"

JANE O'GORMAN SOLVES YOUR PROBLEMS TODAY AND EVERY DAY

Fella is making himself sick

I'M terrified that my boyfriend has an eating disorder.

Three times recently I've caught him being sick after a meal.

He always claims he has food poisoning but I reckon he's deliberately making himself vomit.

Things started to go bad last summer.

We went on holiday with friends. One of the guys was very fit and kept taking the mickey out of my fella's beer belly.

I could tell he was upset and as soon as we got home he started a massive programme of exercise and healthy eating.

He joined a gym and asked me only to cook low fat stuff.

His weight dropped off and last October he was looking fab. But now I worry that he's gone too far.

He's taken to undressing in the bathroom so that I can't see him naked.

But the other day I burst in on him and I was able to see he was just flesh and bones.

On the rare times we make love he insists that he takes me from behind - doggy style - and that we do it with the lights off.

That way I can't see his body.

But I can feel his bony hips against me and it's not nice.

JANE SAYS: Eating disorders are certainly not exclusive to women.

If your boyfriend is starving himself and making himself sick, then he needs to get urgent medical help.

People die from Anorexia and the cycle of binge-eating and dieting that Bulimics get sucked into is very bad for the body.

It is clear your boyfriend is a very unhappy man who needs professional support.

The hurtful comments he received on that holiday have made him hate himself and this needs to be rectified.

The Eating Disorders Association can be contacted on 01603 621414.

GIRL'S CREDIT CRAZY

I'M seriously worried about my partner's spending habits. At the moment she's almost out of control.

Each evening she staggers home with yet more junk for Christmas. Our bedroom is a sea of carrier bags and she reckons she's not finished yet.

The other day one credit card company even rang me up and asked me if our card had been stolen. They said a woman was spending heavily at posh London stores and they were worried that a thief was at work.

They were only satisfied once I got my partner to ring them back and verify our address and her date of birth.

I dread to think what that bill will be in January.

I keep asking her to slow down. But she says everyone else in living on credit, so why shouldn't she?

JANE SAYS: Just because some people overspend and run up bills they can't afford, doesn't make it right. Spending for the sake of it is greedy, irresponsible and immature.

At some point, your debts will have to be repaid with interest. Your partner may like the idea of swanking around London and seeing the carrier bags piling up but she's being a fool.

Sit her down before the problem gets any worse. Insist she goes through the stuff she's got so far. Some of it could be returned. Remember you can call the Credit Action Helpline (0800 591084) if ever you need advice and support on debt.

He bonked girl on boss's table

MY husband is sleeping with an 18-year-old girl. It's almost as if he's addicted to her.

I've pleaded and begged with him to give her up. But he's still sneaking out to meet her and making furtive phone calls at the bottom of our garden.

He doesn't even bother hiding his condoms or their motel bills. The drawers of his bedside table are stuffed with proof of his cheating. A few weeks ago it was our son's 21st birthday. I'd organised a party, but my husband didn't turn up until gone 11pm. He had some stupid story, but he'd obviously been out shagging her.

Infatuated

He is 45 and this nightmare started last summer. Several students came to his office on work experience and he became infatuated with this one.

He nearly lost his job when his boss caught them bonking on the boardroom table. She was escorted from the building and my husband had to beg for his job.

I've shouted myself hoarse pleading with him to pull himself together and give our marriage a future.

A couple of nights ago I asked him what the girl's mother thought of their affair and he said that she approved. I feel like I'm going mad.

JANE SAYS: I think you need to get it clear in your own mind how much more you're prepared to take. What will be the straw that breaks this particular camel's back?

So far your husband has humiliated you at your son's party and disgraced himself in front of his boss. In your home he obviously contacts this lover and doesn't even bother to hide his condoms or cover his tracks.

It's as if he's goading you. He's too cowardly to make a move, so he wants you to blow your top, throw him out and force him to start a new life.

I urge you to bring him to the negotiating table and insist on an adult discussion about this. Put the ball in his court - is he staying? Or is he going?

If he's staying, then insist that you visit Relate (0845 456 1310) together. If he's going, then go alone. You can't allow him to carry on playing these stupid games.

Net love turns sour

MY new wife makes me feel sick. I can see her getting fatter by the day. We haven't had sex in weeks and that suits me fine.

We only married last April after a whirlwind internet romance. She had posted some sexy pictures of herself on the web and we started e-mailing each other. I was driven by lust from the start and we married on a whim after our fourth meeting.

Now that the honeymoon period is over, I realise that I don't even know this woman. We have nothing in common and I can't respect her.

She has no opinions, no ambitions and no interest in the world. All she wants to do is watch TV in bed and eat junk food.

Loads of times recently I've suggested going out on day trips, visiting the cinema and meeting up with my friends, but she just says "nah". Being in the house night after night is doing my head in and I just want to get out.

JANE SAYS: I've got a sneaking suspicion that your wife is as unhappy as you are. Stuffing her face and hiding herself away 24/7 are not the actions of a contented new wife. She sounds depressed. Why don't you break the ice and actually talk to her.

Admit that you don't think that things are working at the moment. See if you can meet each other half way.

Marriage is very hard work and a commitment for life. If you both feel that you've made a terrible mistake, perhaps it would be better to part now before things get really messy.
